CAUSE OF TROUBLE WITH THE INCANDESCENT LIGHTS.

That's what the Superintendent Says—Merchants and Others Put to Great Inconvenience About Lights for Their Stores and Residences.

The present system of lighting by electricity is far from perfect, and especially is this so in regard to the incandescent lights. For several nights past a large number of them have been out of service, and many of the merchants have been put to much disadvantage. Monday night the armature of the largest and power Company burned out, and another armature was substituted in a few minutes and little inconvenience was experienced, but the new armature was not perfectly balanced and it burned out in a few days. Another could not be obtained nearer than Pittsburg. The company telegraphed to hurry it forward, but it will certainly be next Tuesday or later before it arrives. This dynamo supplies the lights for the Main street and a large majority of the Broad street stores.

At this season of the year does this break-down inconvenience the merchants who light their stores with electricity, many of them have done away with their gas fixtures. Expressions of a determination to do so are heard every day, as electric light is so unreliable.

After the break-down, as many of the lights as possible were switched on, but there were three or four incandescent lamps which are for the time being useless. The company have since the break-down put in a new dynamo to take the place temporarily of the incandescent, and by to-morrow night all who have not gas fixtures, the company's officials say, will be supplied with electric lights.

A SPECIAL GUARANTEE.

When the contract was awarded the company for lighting the Capitol they were compelled to guarantee that the lights would be in good order, and now that building and a few other fortunate ones are on a special circuit, which is always kept in good order, and Mr. W. E. Taylor, superintendent of the works, said last night that the only remedy he saw to secure absolute certainty for the lights was to have two dynamo's put in a new engine and another dynamo for the incandescent lights, and he thought this would be the best way to better equip the city generally.

STORAGE SYSTEM.

At one time there were great hopes of using the storage battery with the system of lighting, and it was even put in a building, and now that building and a few other fortunate ones are on a special circuit, which is always kept in good order, and Mr. W. E. Taylor, superintendent of the works, said last night that the only remedy he saw to secure absolute certainty for the lights was to have two dynamo's put in a new engine and another dynamo for the incandescent lights, and he thought this would be the best way to better equip the city generally.

UNION AND ASSOCIATION.

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN MUSICAL BODIES ARRANGED.

The Mozart Musical to Have Professional Musicians When the Chorus Sing Monday Night Under Mr. Marshall's Direction—History of the Trouble.

The former peaceful relations between the Mozart Association and the Richmond Musical Union have been restored, and interrupted friendship and good will now holds the fort.

At the commencement of the Mozart Association the orchestra was composed of the best musicians of the city. Very small salaries, however, were paid, and during this time the musicians formed a branch of the Musical Union of America.

On a certain Monday morning, however, the Mozart Association repudiated their means of support, and the musicians were left to their own devices.

The Board of Governors' view of the matter was that it was an impossibility to pay the musicians more, and needing an orchestra they were forced to procure the same elsewhere.

A short time ago Mr. Clarence A. Marshall resolved, if possible, to adjust the musical relations. In this he was successful, and Monday night at the Mozart musicale he needs an orchestra that can handle a higher class of music than the amateurs are used to.

As a result of this happy transaction, the Mozart Association has secured an orchestra for his concert Monday night, and last night the musicians and chorus were rehearsed at the hall.

The chorus rehearsed to above is the Mozart Association chorus, which is a fine one. They make their debut at the musicale Monday night, and Mrs. Marshall will be the soloist of the evening.

The musical union is now stronger than it has ever been before. The membership is about forty, and comprises nearly all the reading musicians of the city.

A STRANGE EPISODE.

A Reporter Who Had a Bank Account.

It is strange indeed that a newspaper reporter should ever have had a bank account and a check book, but strange as it seems it is an actual fact that such was the case.

It is unnecessary, however, to mention the amount of the balance in bank at any one time, but these balance days were the reporter was a reporter. He was then engaged in business on his own hook, however small that hook may have been, in a village near Richmond.

By the way, the editing of a country weekly—a tramp printer happened along. That very odd when the printer should have been on the press, but very fit of the type was set for the issue, consequently the printer was given a job.

On a certain Monday morning, however, the Mozart Association repudiated their means of support, and the musicians were left to their own devices.

The Board of Governors' view of the matter was that it was an impossibility to pay the musicians more, and needing an orchestra they were forced to procure the same elsewhere.
